

Dr. Amanda L. Russell is a board-certified family medicine physician practicing in Dinwiddie, Virginia. She provides comprehensive primary care to patients of all ages, with clinical expertise in chronic disease management, including diabetes, hypertension, and obesity. Dr. Russell practices with Southern Dominion Health System, Inc., a Federally Qualified Health Center (FQHC) serving rural and medically underserved communities in Southside Virginia. As an FQHC, the organization receives federal Health Center Program funding and reports annual performance data to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services through the Uniform Data System.

Dr. Russell is certified by the American Board of Family Medicine and holds an active Virginia medical license.

Dr. Russell earned her medical degree from Eastern Virginia Medical School and completed her Family Medicine residency at the University of Virginia Medical Center.